MARTINI INDUSTRIES THE TOAST OF INGLEBURN

July 7, 2009

Business is booming for Martini Industries of Ingleburn after the company successfully completed a NSW Government trade mission to Qatar in April this year.

The NSW Minister for Small Business Steve Whan said Martini Industries increased its workforce from 43 people to 60 to keep up with demand to supply insulation products.

“Martini Industries is going from strength to strength as a result of the NSW Government’s trade mission,” Minister Whan said.

“The NSW Government supported Martini Industries through its New Export Opportunities Program which encourages companies to take the next step into export.

“Martini Industries claim its product range is the finest in Australia, and its advanced manufacturing facility in Ingleburn is also used for in-house research, development and product testing”.

“Its product range attracted significant interest in Qatar, and is also proving a boost to the company here in NSW,” he said.

Martini Industries product range include thermal and acoustic polyester insulation, as well as reflective foil insulation, both of which provide energy savings and are suitable in commercial, industrial and domestic applications.

“The company’s innovative approach allows it to supply products into various other industrial markets such as filtration, flexible ducting, flooring, bedding and furniture,” he said.

Greg Selwood of Martini Industries said the company’s expansion had been the result of the growing social awareness in regards insulation and energy saving.

“In order to provide solutions for our clients we’ve created a range of products that are not only environmentally green and responsible, but also are superior in performance,” Mr Greg Selwood said.

“The NSW Government’s export initiatives and the Federal Government’s stimulus package have certainly opened new markets and opportunities for our company, for which they are to be commended.”
